Broughton David Broughton is a fictional character from the popular British soap opera, Coronation Street, portrayed by Ken Farrington. He made his first appearance on 4 February 1987. David was a businessman and the husband of Gail Platt (Helen Worth). The character was played by Ray Kelly before it was announced in May 2002 that Farrington would be taking over the role. Character development Creation and casting David Broughton was introduced in February 1987 as a character created by the show's executive producer, Trevor McDonald, and was one of McDonald's first character additions. The character was originally played by Ray Kelly, who remained with the show until he left in 1987 to take part in a series of short films called The Kelly Parkers. The producers wanted to replace him with a younger actor so they had the role recast with British actor, Ken Farrington. He was the first new member of the cast to
