For some reason though, it won't work. The code is as follows I have tried to be as specific as possible. `import urllib.request import os r=urllib.request.urlopen("") text=r.read() f=open("tempfile.txt","w") f.write(text) f.close() content = f.read() #print(content) #print(content) myFile = open("text.txt","w") myFile.write(content) myFile.close()` A: I have just one error in your code. Your new line, `f=open("tempfile.txt","w")` should be `myFile = open("tempfile.txt","w")` Here's an example code, which I expect will work for you: `import urllib.request import os r=urllib.request.urlopen("") text=r.read() myFile = open("tempfile.txt","w") myFile.write(text) myFile.close() myFile = open("text.txt","w") myFile.write(text) myFile.close()` Q: How to check if a sequence of floating numbers are positive I am working on the project where I need to check whether a sequence of floating numbers are positive or not. I found out some ways to check if sequence is positive or negative but it is not

Im a regular guy, im a straight guy and i want to download it... Downloading a movie for the first time is an intimidating experience. You arent sure if you made the right decision, or if you should have waited to watch it after watching all the critical reviews and positive comments... The way i started watching this movie and i did not liked it, but after reading some reviews about it, i came back to watch it and then i liked it.. Im a regular guy, im a straight guy and i want to download it.. How would you like to download a movie from Netflix? And it wouldnt be a Hollywood movie, no sir. It would be a Bollywood flick, a Hindi one at that.. Im a regular guy, im a straight guy and i want to download it.. How would you like to download a movie from Netflix?
