To determine the genomic characteristics of hepatitis C virus (HCV) in Japan, we analyzed sequence data from 50 patients with acute and/or chronic hepatitis C infection. Serum samples were collected before interferon treatment. Two patients infected with HCV type 1a showed no amino acid (aa) substitutions in the NS3 region during interferon treatment. HCV type 1b infections were found in 22 patients. Four patients had aa substitutions in the NS3 region, and six patients had an NS5A-R38T/G substitution. Three patients had aa substitutions in both regions. The remaining 14 patients had no mutations in either region of the viral genome. Thus, in all 50 patients, two of four patients infected with HCV type 1b (12%) had aa substitutions in the NS3 region, and six of 22 patients (27%) had an NS5A-R38T/G substitution. These data indicate that some Japanese patients with acute or chronic hepatitis C infection are infected with a genotype of HCV different from the prototype strain.The legal highs 'spice', 'black mamba' and 'cannabis' are already being sold online in the UK, the government has said. It is the first time that the government has admitted the drugs are being sold online, although last week, Health Minister Dan Poulter denied that in a letter to the Shadow Health Minister, Clive Efford. Spice and Black Mamba are the most commonly seized drugs at police stations, and can be bought easily online from sites such as Dextrux, where suppliers offer a range of drugs online. A spokesman for the UK's National Crime Agency said that they had not seized any of the three products yet, but "people should be aware that these products are available" to buy online. Spice is a man-made drug containing a mix of psychoactive substances, including cathinone, amphetamine and other substances. According to the NCA, it is similar to synthetic cannabis and is sold as an 'energy' supplement. Black Mamba is another man-made drug with a similar effect. The 2d92ce491b
