Plot: A tax collector who wants to reform society with the idea of "change instead of revenge" tries to control himself by trying to teach... himself to be human. And this is where the problems begin. But is it a problem for him? The film raises acute social problems, but there is nothing flashy in it, so you should not expect a revolution or a change in the social order. The film raises some important questions, but not in the form of revolutionary ideas. Rather, this is a film about a person who is trying to understand himself and the people around him, about how he does it. About how a person tries to do something good, instead of just taking revenge. fffad4f19a
