Use the Hosts file for the network settings of your computer. On Windows systems, the Hosts file is an essential part of network configuration. It records network information for the local sub-network, and is used as the DNS (Internet Domain Name Server) for the local domain. The Hosts file is a very simple text file with one header line, followed by a list of network hosts, and then a carriage-return. Browsing the Hosts File: When you open the Hosts file, the Local Computer Hosts tab displays the current settings for your system's network adapters. Hosts can be used either as a source of static IP address or hostname for the local network. HOSTS TAB It is a list of hosts you can use. You can set up the speed, specify your DNS server, and enter your netmask and broadcast addresses. You can also set IP address exceptions for internet access. For example if you want to surf the web only with specific IP addresses, you can enter them in that space. You can also set up static IP addresses that can be saved. Managing DNS: The network configuration options on this tab lets you define the DNS server addresses and IP addresses of your company or ISP. You can also enter DNS server addresses for your local network. The application has a quick search field, and it also shows hosts for hosts with only the domain name specified, like "google.com", rather than an IP address. You can also check the address of the DNS server on the hosts file using the IP address. Modifying the Hosts File: You can add, delete, or modify hosts in the file by using the Save button on the Hosts tab. The Hosts file can be modified by right clicking on it from the file manager and choosing "Edit hosts". There is an option to automatically detect changes to the Hosts file. Hosts Tray Serial Key Frequently Asked Questions: Q: What is the meaning of the Hosts file? A: The Hosts file is an essential part of the network configuration.
