CurlMini is a graphic version of cURL, a CLI tool for seamlessly transferring data via different network protocols. Simply because the tool comes with a graphic interface, that does not automatically mean that users do not need to bother with knowing the commands. In fact, the commands required are the same. The GUI consists of a single window with a dedicated request box in the upper section where users can add the desired command. In the lower section, the interface features two boxes with the current and old result for the requests made. According to the developer, the tool comes with an ability to expand the text field for the command, a feature that may come in handy when checking for indents, line breaks or unnecessary spaces. Providing that none of the aforementioned are present in the command, the request should be executed fast and smooth. It is worth mentioning that the tool records all requests locally in a file dubbed requests.log, which can be found in the app's folder. At the same time, the program includes a request history button where everything is recorded so they can be reused. Bottom line is that all requests executed are automatically saved, thus simplifying cURL users work.A mobile communication system is required to quickly and stably provide a service to a large number of users. In order to implement this, a Mobile Stations (MSs) need to rapidly and accurately perform location registration. To this end, a short paging message or a location area update message needs to be efficiently delivered to the MSs. In order to provide a location registration service, a location area service is defined by an industry standard. A network and a base station should belong to the location area and their location coordinates should match each other. An MS should register its location coordinates with a network and a base station and this location registration process is referred to as a location registration procedure. A method of measuring the location coordinates of a base station and an MS is a method of measuring the location coordinates of the base station by using a timer. A base station controller (BSC) calculates the location coordinates of an MS by measuring the location coordinates of the base station using this method. For this, the base station periodically transmits a location area identification (LAI) broadcast message which is a short message and notifies the MS of the location coordinates of the base station. An LAI broadcast message may be referred to as a paging message. The MS measures the location coordinates of the base station by using the LAI broadcast message transmitted
