Dendritic growth is a fascinating process resulting in a variety of branched colloidal nanoparticles with a large number of different architectures and shapes. Organic solvents such as alcohols are known to be good at directing the nucleation of well-defined dendritic particles because of their low energy of the hydroxyl group. In this study, we have investigated the effect of the solvent chain length on the synthesis of gold dendritic nanoparticles by the reduction of HAuCl₄ using poly(amido amine) (PAMAM) dendrimers as templating agents. The dendritic PAMAM-templated gold nanoparticles were characterized using UV-vis, TEM, DLS, and FE-SEM. The solvent nature, such as 1,2-difluoroethanol and 2-chloroethanol, was found to play a major role in the formation of these particles. Q: How do I shift a String and retain capitalization?
