Q: Most useful REST content-negotiation library I can't find any "best" REST content-negotiation lib for PHP. I'm looking for something that is robust, robustly internationalised, and not hard to use. Google gives me an answer but I'd like a different opinion. (It's probably a stupid question but... I can't find a website that explains properly what content-negotiation is, what protocols support it, and what is the best/worst, most versatile lib to use.) EDIT: I am aware of alternatives for JSON/HTML content-negotiation, but I'm looking for a *NIX portability solution. I want to implement something like a CXF Content-Negotiation extension ( in pure PHP. A: The problem is... you cannot "port" it. If you are writing a client yourself you can be sure you did everything correctly or look for a library that can do it for you and return a blob (not HTTP headers) for different types of data, or even be able to return JSON/XML. That being said, having a REST service always return the same content type is the only way to do it right. The European Organization for Research and Treatment of Cancer (EORTC) trial ALL-HD9 investigated a chemotherapeutic regimen that resulted in a significantly higher complete remission rate than the German protocol DEP2002. The aim of this study was to assess, after 15 years, the clinical outcome of ALL survivors treated in a German tertiary care center. Data from ALL patients treated between 1999 and 2003 in the Römisch-German Cancer Research Center (Deutsche Krebshil
