Twake is a home desktop assistant which can automate workflows in your home so that you can get stuff done without needing to work your way through a web app or native app. The thing I love about Twake is that you can connect with the app from anywhere in the world and control it using your voice. It currently supports Amazon Alexa, Google Assistant, and Home Assistant so you're never left in the dark as to what your smart home can do. I find this really useful in a couple of ways. Firstly, it's simply a lot quicker than logging into a web app and setting up workflows to carry out some actions that you usually end up doing when you're on your phone. In my case, I had a script that I ran every day, but the script was written in the native app so I'd have to open the app and run it every day, which got a little tedious. Instead of creating a sync action in the native app every time I wanted to run the script, I could just do it directly from Twake using the web app and not have to open the native app. Secondly, I've found that in my home it's almost impossible to remember to check that I've got the basics such as locking doors, turning the lights off and charging the washing machine. Using Twake, I can set up an Alexa voice command that triggers my script which carries out my chores, turning off lights, locking doors etc. The convenience of having to do all my routines from within the same place (my home) is just great, I've been so impressed with it that I've now got one installed in each of my children's homes, too. As well as automating the tasks that you do on a daily basis, it's possible to create workflows that will run at specific times or trigger at a particular event. For example, I have a recurring meeting every week on Tuesday at 10.00am for the one hour period that I'm not working on the business, so that I can

Twake feels like a full-fledged productivity tool that prioritizes you, and your team, above everything else. An unlimited scheduling feature (no need to worry about the limits of hours or days) — or, per client preferences, even on a granular level — means that you can plan meetings around your busy schedule rather than the other way around. The app is fully customizable with a visual drag-and-drop editor for desktop and mobile, from task duration and list-based to nested sharing. We even added an app folder for sharing links to add-ons that make Twake easier to work with. Its pairing with Jitsi ensures a high-quality video conferencing experience, and a Google Docs-based file sharing lets you securely store documents and work collaboratively. Webhooks and notifications from those mentioned platforms, as well as several APIs, e.g., GitHub, are also included, so that you can easily leverage third-party apps to automate recurring processes that work best when team members are in the same room. About The Software Apart from a rich suite of features, the app is also designed to help you get things done. With unlimited scheduling flexibility, it's easy to have unplanned, last-minute meetings. For less frequent updates, you can set time zones for individual members, as well as choose weekly, monthly, or even per-action plans for your meetings. Time tracking is also a breeze: you can set your own rules and reminders, or simply track time-on-task right from your chat window. And since you don't want to miss a meeting, you can also post reminders and share them with the whole team. Unlimited scheduling Scheduling has never been easier: pick the hours and days you'd like to meet with a particular person. Once you've set up the details, all you have to do is wait for your "scheduler", and they'll send you a reminder. The app will maintain a list of conversations for a flexible number of weeks, up to a year. The users you invite will receive your notification as soon as they accept the meeting request. Time tracking Keep track of your time in real-time, right from your chats. Use this feature to track time-on-task for every member of your team, or more granularly — e.g., per hour, per day, per week. As soon as you reach a new milestone, you can share the details via group chat
